Frank Here and There and Everywhere

Frank mig her

What happens when Dad suddenly gets a new partner? That this new partner also happens to be a man is not the main topic of the book. The focus is more on accepting new relations in the family.

Line-Maria Lång (b. 1982) is a Danish-Swedish author of both adult- and children's books.

Karen Vad Bruun (b. 1977) has worked with books in many different roles: as author, translator, publisher and rights seller.

Cato Thau-Jensen (b. 1966) is a Danish illustrator, known for his wild and colourful illustrations in humorous children's books.

SYNOPSIS

"Dad says that he is a proper "Frankophile". He likes everything and anything to do with Frank". That includes French waffles, franked mail and Frankenstein's monster. And one day it also turns out that it includes a man called Frank, who moves in with father and son in their flat.

It is not easy to make space in the family for a new surprise member. Especially not Frank, who takes up way too much space. It is Frank here and there and everywhere.

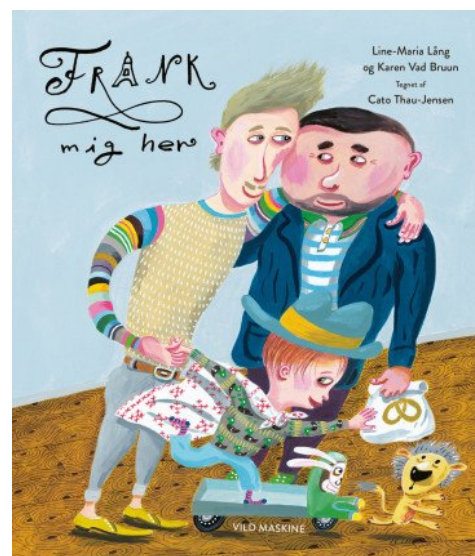

A lovely picture book where the focus is less on diversity and more on accepting new family constellations and giving in to something that is actually rather nice – a new friend, whose large shoes can contain a lot of Lego (and water)...

REVIEWS

"Linguistically the book is incredibly innovative and playful: "It's Frank here and there and everywhere", as the boy says. Thau-Jensen's illustrations are full of quirkiness." – Damián Arguimbau (Kristeligt Dagblad)

"This is quality stamped Danish children's book literature, told and drawn with solidary love and elevated from all kinds of prejudice - a true, top-modern rainbow story." – Klaus Rothstein (Bo Bedre (Danish magazine))
